Remedy Interactive Announces the Acquisition of RSIGuard Software

SAUSALITO, CA - December 5, 2003 - Remedy Interactive today announced the acquisition of RSIGuard Software – the leading provider of desktop applications used for the monitoring and management of work patterns that contribute to repetitive strain injuries.

"We chose RSIGuard because of its strong reputation among customers and partners and because RSIGuard applications offer the richest feature set and the highest quality in the industry," said Kim Lopez, CEO of Remedy Interactive.

The acquisition of RSIGuard Software complements Remedy Interactive's web-based applications, extends the company's technology lead, and makes Remedy Interactive the first and only company to offer such an integrated product line. The combination of the two companies means that customers can realize lower costs through an industry-leading suite of:

- Multi-lingual ergonomic training and risk assessment applications;
- Program management, analytic, communication and reporting applications; and
- Personalized work pattern optimization applications for the desktop.

In addition to this unique set of applications, Remedy Interactive will continue to provide customers with world-class service and support, industry expertise, a proven track record of results, and the industry's best enterprise integration technology.

"With this acquisition, Remedy Interactive is again demonstrating its market leadership in an environment where all organizations are looking for cost reduction opportunities. Remedy Interactive leads the injury prevention software industry by offering proven software applications that maximize injury prevention," said Kim Fisher, Executive Director of the Women's Technology Cluster in San Francisco, an incubator for information technology, life science, and social ventures.
